

There's a certain joy that bubbles up when the thing that you have envisioned for so long finally becomes a reality, and that is exactly what has happened for us in these recent months.!

Currently, I (Kenneth) am in the U.S. to bring Hannah to settle into the next phase of life, studying at Houston Baptist University. She was sad to say goodbye to her home and go off to a "foreign" country to study yet we know that as she pursues her dream to become a doctor, the Lord will care for and guide her as He always has. We couldn't be more proud!

As of two weeks ago, a group from Antioch Church in Texas arrived to do their summertime discipleship school. After a couple meetings with the leaders, they decided that Calvary Chapel Cusco would be one of three ministries they'd partner with and support during their time in here!

After sharing our vision to reach the local university and how we were using English skills to further that, we shared the vision of the café. Ben, fell in love with the idea, and it also fit with what they were wanting to do-it

Father. Once we open, the team will be on campus inviting students to Bible Study, the cafe and English Conversation Club. This is all aimed at evangelizing and winning the young people to Jesus with skills available to Here's a few more things to pray with us about. Pray the Lord comfort us as we transition into a family of four in Cusco. It's one thing to send your daughter to college, it's another to send her to college on the other side of the world. Also, pray for the ministry. The doors to the church will now be open every day and we hope to see a lot of new faces in the months and years to come. And pray that any, and all, opposition would be met by the Holy Spirit and through it bring revival and a great harvest in Cusco. Lastly, pray about investing with us. There are still costs that need to be covered, as soon as we open but it is a way to reach the young adults of Cusco for Jesus.

was an immediate connection. As we moved forward there were some roadblocks, but just a couple days ago, everything came together, and we will be opening within the next two weeks!

We still have a lot of expenses to cover, but the thing that we have talked about since moving here is happening because of the faithfulness of our

us. These are also two big steps for our family. With Hannah going away to college, we are left with a hole in our family unit, and with the café opening, a lot more work is put on our plate to keep it operating. Please keep us in prayer as we move into this new season!
